(a)	8	10	This response has addressed parts of this question in a manner that suggests the specific demands of the question have been understood and addressed. Both market structures have been explained, and diagrams have been provided to illustrate each one. The diagrams are fully labelled and explained. Relevant terms are usually used accurately. The response provides evidence of a good understanding of relevant subject matter, which has been appropriately used to address the question.
(b)	12	15	The beginning of the response is sensible, providing some explanation of market power. The stated intention, namely to use perfect competition as a benchmark, is reasonable. The theory is generally well understood and developed throughout. The specific demands of the question are clearly understood and addressed, and economic theory is explained. The terminology is used in a relevant manner throughout the response, although there are a few flaws. There is an attempt to make use of examples throughout and to utilize them in the context of the discussion; there is some success with this. Diagrams have been used, and although they are not drafted very clearly, they are used accurately for the most part and are explained. There are flaws in this response but, overall, it is a good attempt to address the question, and it achieves reasonable synthesis and use of examples. There is some balance to the synthesis.
